Abstract:

This play is set against the backdrop of Cyclone Fani in the village of Brahamagiri, Puri and aims to raise awareness about the importance of menstrual hygiene especially during natural disasters. This story is about a teenage girl who does not want to sacrifice the piece of cloth her aunt gifted to her for Raja when mother gets her periods during the cyclone. This play highlights how important it is to openly discuss about the problems that women face, especially problems like menstrual hygiene, which is still a taboo in villages, and put them higher up the list of priorities. This play also touches on the theme of love and sacrifice.
